Reviews

The Excluded Past
Archaeology in Education

Edited by F. Stone & R. MacKenzie

This book offers a comprehensive overview of the field of archaeology in education, focusing on the challenges and opportunities of teaching archaeology in various educational settings. Through contributions from leading scholars in the field, the editors provide a rich tapestry of case studies and theoretical insights that highlight the importance of archaeological education. The book is a valuable resource for educators, researchers, and students interested in the intersection of archaeology and education.

Videos

Roman Writing Unravelled

This film provides an engaging and accessible introduction to the study of Roman writing. Through a series of visual and textual analyses, viewers are guided through the complexities of Roman scription, revealing the rich and varied ways in which writers expressed themselves. The film is an excellent resource for students and educators alike, offering a dynamic and interactive learning experience.

Footnotes

Yarmouth Town Trail

This walking route takes you through the historic streets of Yarmouth, offering a guided tour of the town's architectural and cultural heritage. The trail is well-marked and accessible, making it suitable for families and history enthusiasts. With information on local history and buildings, the trail is an enjoyable way to explore Yarmouth.

Totton Castle, A Discovery Park for Families

This is the third in a series of practical projects aimed at groups of adults and children making a visit to a site. It contains activities which complement the Handbook for Teachers which is already available. The trail includes maps, traditions and history of the area, and activities for groups to enjoy.

Totton Castle, A Discovery Park for Families

This is the third in a series of practical projects aimed at groups of adults and children making a visit to a site. It contains activities which complement the Handbook for Teachers which is already available. The trail includes maps, traditions and history of the area, and activities for groups to enjoy.

Rochester Castle, A Handbook for Teachers

This handbook is intended as an aid to teachers making visits to sites. Discovery of its design and purpose can involve learning skills such as observation, recording, deduction, measuring, estimating and language, which extend across the curriculum.

English Heritage Educational Resources

CATALOGUE

We will shortly be providing in March the new 1990 edition of our Information for Teachers book and Resources catalogue. If you would like free copies please complete and return the slip below.

Information for Teachers will contain full details on how to book a free group visit together with practical ideas for preparing pupils and ensuring that they get the best from their visit.

Resources will contain full details of all our publications, videos, posters etc and free information available for teachers.

Please return this slip to:

English Heritage Education Service, Keysign House, 429 Oxford Street, London W1R 2HD

Please send me copies of the 1990 Information for Teachers and Resources when they are available:

NAME: ___________________________

ADDRESS: _______________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________